To the friends of Temperance and the public generally we now make our appeal in behalf of this paper. The publisher feeling it a matter of importance to the interest of the Temperance cause in the District, as well as the general interest of the cause, and having been, as he conceives, Providentially placed in a situation at this time when he can mingle this interest with that of the business men, and thereby render a double service to the community, and still further open a medium of communication by which our principles may be extended far and wide, at a cheap rate. He has purchased a printing establishment, so as not only to be able to put a daily paper regularly to press, but also a weekly; and still further, be able to do any other printing the public may be pleased to have done; and he assures them that they shall have no cause of complaint. He has made arrangements by which he can devote his time to the interest of the office and the paper; and, having employed Mr. Charles W.
Fenton, who will be always on the spot, to conduct the printing, he has no doubt but that general satisfaction will be given. We shall make arrangements to have the earliest news; also the proceedings of Congress.

We wish all who are indebted for the paper up to this time to pay up, as the affairs of the tri-weekly must be closed. They will perceive that we are about to give them a better paper, double the number, at the same price.

While the "COLUMBIAN FOUNTAIN" will be devoted to the cause of Temperance, its columns will be enriched by original articles on subjects calculated to interest, instruct, and benefit its readers. It is intended so to blend variety, amusement, and instruction, as that the various tastes of its patrons may be (as far as it is practicable) gratified.
Commerce, Literature, and Science, and every other subject of interest, not inconsistent with Temperance and morality, will receive the earnest attention of the publishers.
Nothing of a sectarian, political, or personal character will be admitted.

A CARD.

THE subscriber begs leave to say to members of Congress and others, that he has several good rooms which he will let on accommodating terms, either furnished or unfurnished, located on the South side of Pennsylvania avenue, between 9th and 10th streets, and equidistant between the Capitol and the public offices. I have also two of the best cellars in the city, which I will rent in part or the whole, or receive goods on storage.
This is a good opportunity for butchers or market people.

JUST FROM THE MINT!!!

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

L. S. BECK & SON, would take this method of notifying the citizens of Washington and the adjacent counties of Maryland and Virginia, that they have commenced the house furnishing business in all its various branches, on Pennsylvania avenue, South side, between 9th and 10th streets, where they intend keeping a constant supply of new and second hand goods, and promise to sell on the most reasonable terms. We, therefore, solicit a call from our friends and the public generally, as we intend selling at a VERY SLIGHT PROFIT. We would enumerate in part the following: Ivory, Buck and Cocoa handled knives and forks; White, Black and Brown

MISCELLANEOUS.

MARGARET GREEN, OR, THE DRUNKARD'S DAUGHTER.

BY WILLIAM H. LINDSAY.

Margaret was at this time about seventeen years of age. She was of a medium size, neither too large to render the contour of her features repulsive, nor yet so small as to attract the particular attention of a stranger. Her eyes were dark and piercing, and the dark auburn ringlets, as they fell over her shoulders, which would well vie with alabaster, in virgin whiteness, seemed to gather in curls of graceful and symmetrical folds. All was lofty, and full of that rectitude and pride, which virtue inspires in woman. Her countenance was that of an angel; and her form as sylph-like and aerial as if she belonged to another world of beings. But it is not the empty illusions of worldly beauty that I speak. On earth, beauty is a mere nothing—many a gem of the purest brightness is encased in the humblest and most disgusting tenement—and many a serpent, more dangerous than the asp of the Nile, makes its home in a casket of most exquisite beauty. But God seemed to have endowed both mind and body with the richest ornaments in the formation of the Drunkard's Daughter. Her heart which acknowledged God as the fountain head of all good, turned to its fellow beings with a reverential and humane feeling of tenderness. In case of a severe struggle—when racked by pain or trouble—a fellow being suffered, it opened the fountain of her tears, and as they flowed, the voice of sympathy and compassion was heard sounding in her ears, "peace, peace—God will sustain you in all your undertakings." Her's was indeed a woman's heart—filled with love and friendship—with truth and holiness—and all the finer qualities of a heart which characterizes the female—that is, the true female portion of creation. Margaret was indeed an exemplary girl; her conduct was beyond the point of civility; and though she was despised by many, because, forsooth, her father had fallen into vice, yet all who knew her loved and adored her. To the poor, she was indeed an angel of mercy—ministering to their wants—she sought the bed of sickness, the chamber of fell disease; and as the lurid glare of the midnight lamp fell upon her pale countenance, she was seen bending over the body of the stricken, and preparing their last breath to be wafted to the high chancery of Heaven, coupled with a fervent and heartfelt prayer. Such was the character of Margaret Green, and such the character which had rivetted the attention, and fixed the love of James Gordon, the amiable and true, to the Drunkard's Daughter.

But time, which brings around all things, at length ushered in the hour of the ball, which was to be given at the house of James Cartell. I will not detain the reader with a sketch of this man's character. Such a course would not only be inconsistent with my present sketch, but be wearisome and uninteresting to the fair being who follows in rambling tracts to the end. Suffice it easy to say, that Cartell, like his bosom friend, Henry Bertram, entertained the false idea, that wealth, sordid and ill-gotten though it might be, was the only line of demarkation which should distinguish the members of the human family. He looked upon poverty as the most heinous crime of which a man could be guilty, and acting upon this impulse, he despised virtue, and clung with a feverish grasp to vice, when robbed in the timid panoply of wealth. Alas, for the degeneracy of man.

The young and gay—the wealthy and the proud were gathered together in the drawing room of Jonas Cartell. All appeared happy and gay. Not a shade of sorrow seemed to settle on the brows of either of the four beings who had met to pass the social hour as they conversed freely, or laughed and jested in the casual promenade.
Harry Bertram seemed to be in his pride.
Upon his arm hung Minerva Jones, the daughter of a rich and opulent liquor dealer, and as they walked with a proud and haughty air, the little area of the drawing room, the comic jest broke from their lips, and a boisterous volley of laughter resounded through the apartment. All was happy—happy as the profusion of ill-gotten wealth could render such a scene—happy as those who idolized the golden mammon, and cast aside the divine precepts and examples of the lowly Jesus could well be. There was naught of humanity—naught of the feelings which actuate the bosom of one fellow being with holy friendship, dictated by the heart, ob-servable in any there assembled. Wealth, and its concomitants, ignorance and depravity, seemed to reign masters of the ceremony, and as the knee was bent at the shrine of this unholy idol, the ribald jest was carried to the throne of Heaven, as the accusing spirit of that gay and thoughtless crowd. Heaven avert its awful issue—may God in his wisdom sacrifice the false and murderous idol of the world upon the altar of the meek and lowly Nazarene. May the gloom and horror—the misery and crime which flows from a too strenuous regard for filthy lucre be swept from the face of the earth; and the feeling of friendship, mercy, assistance, and brotherly love be installed in lieu thereof!

A few moments, and the doors of the drawing room swung open, and James Gordon, with the beautiful and intelligent Margaret Green, leaning on his arm, entered.
A deathlike stillness for a few seconds pervaded the room, during which, the eyes of the whole company were bent upon the new comers. But this silence was not destined to last long, for it was as quickly dissolved by a shrill buzz of surprise and dissatisfaction—and many a proud lip was turned up in scorn by the assembled crowd, as they gazed upon the radiant countenance of Margaret Green, and the intellectual features of her young partner.

"Who is she?" demanded a young lady who sat near a recess in the window, fanning herself with a white cambric pocket-handkerchief, to Miss Bertram, the sister of Harry, who occupied a seat next her.

"Who is she? Why do you not know her? 'Tis strange such trash should be permitted to disturb our evening's entertainment. It is none else than Mag. Green the drunkard's daughter!"

"La me! and has Cartell invited them?"
"I presume he has—otherwise they would not be here—but for my part I take it as a great insult to bring such degraded creatures into the society of ladies and gentlemen, and am determined not to brave the insult by staying."

"Nor I, Miss Isabel—it is truly ridiculous to insult the dignity of our rank by introducing such worthless beings into our society. For me I will immediately retire, and let those who choose to remain, do so, to be entertained by clowns and —"

Here their conversation was interrupted by the approach of a young exquisite, who, bowing and scraping to the ladies for a few seconds, inquired the reasons of their hasty preparations to leave the Ball.

"We cannot stay here, Mr. Morris, to be insulted by the company Cartell has seen fit to introduce here this evening!" replied Isabel in a haughty and arrogant tone, at the same time casting a look of tenderness upon the young popinjay.

"Indeed! Why, 'pon my soul, I cannot comprehend you, ladies. 'Tis indeed past my comprehension," and he twisted his verdant imperial as he laughingly gazed upon Isabel and her companion.

"To comprehend us, is easy enough, Mr.
Morris, when you look around you, and see the company into which we are introduced.
Look around you, and tell us if you do not see some with whom it would require a compromise of our dignity to associate?"

"Well, now, 'pon hon-nah, ladies," said the dandy, staring unintelligibly around the room, "I can see none, with whom we positively have associated before, save the young lady who comes here with James Gordon."

"Lady!" exclaimed Isabel, casting a look of scorn upon the exquisite. "So, you call her a lady! you can entertain your own opinion, Mr. Morris, but such ladies, let me assure you, cannot find a place in my calendar!"

"And why not, Isabel?" interrupted Mr.
Morris—"surely, she is beautiful, and as James Gordon has selected her as a partner, I am convinced that she must be virtuous and amiable!" replied the young dandy, unconscious of the extent to which the two fair and haughty beings had carried their envy and prejudice against the innocent and intellectual Margaret Green.

"Beautiful! Beautiful, did you say, Mr.
Morris? And pray, sir," continued she, in a sharp and ironical tone, "do point out the peculiar traits of beauty which she possesses.
For my own part, I cannot even see the most passable feature in Old Green, the drunkard's daughter."

This last sentence was pronounced in a bitter and malignant voice, as the fierce glance of the speaker seemed to pierce the inmost recesses of the dandy's heart. For a moment his face was suffused with a crimson flush, and each nerve seemed to be shattered, as he indolently and carelessly remarked:

"And is that really Old Green's daughter? Why, bless me, how very disgusting she appears—shouldn't wonder if she was—"

"Your superior in every thing, both moral and intellectual," interrupted a deep, rich voice, as James Gordon stood before them in all the pride of honest indignation.

(To be concluded.)

WOMAN.

No star in yonder sky that shines, Can light like woman's eyes impart;
The earth holds not in all its mines,
A gem so rich as woman's heart;
Her voice is like the music sweet Poured out from airy harp alone;
Like that, when storms more loudly beat,
It yields a clearer, richer tone.

And woman's love is a holy light That brighter, brighter burns for aye; Years cannot dim its radiant bright, Nor even falsehood quench its ray;
But like the star of Bethlehem Of old, to Israel's shepherd given, It marshals with its steady flame,
The erring soul of man to heaven.

LINES.

The following "Lines" by James R. Lowell, breathes the sentiment of every lover of Liberty and Independence. We do not remember ever seeing them surpassed in boldness of expression or purity of thought.

We will speak out. We will be heard, Though all the earth's system crack,
We will not bate a single word, Nor take a letter back.

We speak the truth, and what care we For hissing and for scorn, While some faint gleaming, we can see
Of Freedom's coming morn.

Let liars fear, let cowards shrink, Let traitors turn away;
Whatever we have dared to think,
That dare we also say!

A gentleman passing down street in hot haste was hailed by a ragged urchin running after him.

"Mither! Mither! O Mither! I thay Mith-er."

"Are you calling me boy?"

"Yeth thir; I thoww, what a great hurry you ith in!"

"Well, speak quick—what do you want? I've no time to spare."

"Ith you goin' down threeth?"

"To be sure, you little dunce, what do you want?"

"Why mother thent me out to hunt our old thepcel hen, and if you theer her I weeth you'd catch her for me—coth, yu theer, I'm tired a lookin' for her!"

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT

ing, with Practical and Historical Details and Illustrations; Commercial Law, and Mercantile Law Reports and Decisions of Courts in the United States and Europe, including Insurance, Partnership, Principal and Agent, Bills of Exchange, Sale, Quaranty, Bankruptcy, Shipping and Navigation, &c., and whatever else, shall tend to develop the resources of the country and the world, and illustrate the various topics bearing upon Commerce and Commercial Literature.

It has been, and will continue to be, the aim of the Editor and Proprietor of the Merchants' Magazine, to avoid everything of a party, political, or sectional bias or bearing, in the conduct of the work—opening its pages to the free and fair discussion of antagonistic doctrines connected with the great interests of Commerce, Agriculture, Manufactures and the Currency.

Complete sets of the Merchants' Magazine, embracing 12 semi-annual volumes, of about 600 large octavo pages each, bringing it down to June, 1844, inclusive, may be obtained at the Publisher's Office, 142 Fulton street, New York, at the subscription price.

Publishers of newspapers in the United States, by giving this advertisement two or three
